What’s your ‘normal’?

What is this toolkit?
If you are an autistic person, or know an autistic person who wants to help people around them understand what their normal is, this tool can help.

The ‘know your normal’ tool allows you to describe what your normal looks like, things such as how much sleep you get, how much time you spend on your interests and hobbies and how this makes you feel, so that if this changes, it’s easier to explain to people who may not understand your autism that something feels different.
“One of the problems with people always looking at people with autism differently is they forget we have shared experiences. So we can get stressed out or unwell too. People spend so much time looking at what makes us different than everyone else, they might miss the signs we’re becoming unwell. And because we get told so often that our unique behaviours are a problem, we might not recognise in ourselves when something is going wrong.

It’s already hard enough for people with autism to seek help for their wellbeing; we often struggle to be taken seriously, and if we are telling people we don’t feel great, then dealing with their emotions about that can be difficult too.

And that’s why it’s so important that we, and the people in our lives, know what our normal looks like. Knowing how we normally behave when we are well, accepting that, and communicating it as our normal, is really important. It helps us and the people who care about us tell when something has changed, and makes it easier to seek help.

We want autistic young people themselves to have the tools to define and voice their own experiences, allowing them to recognise when and where to get support, be taken seriously and as a result gain independence, autonomy and be healthier.

We’ve created this tool to help with this. Everyone can use it – whether they are autistic or not – to help them explain their normal. We hope it’ll tackle the idea that we should all be the same head on, showcase the wide variety of ways we behave when we’re healthy, and make it easier to get help when we’re not.”

How to use this toolkit

Once you’ve filled in this toolkit you can use it to:
- Let people know what your ‘normal’ looks like.
- Check in with yourself to see if your behaviour is changing, and what this means to you.
- Explain to people if something has changed and you think you need support to get your health or wellbeing back on track.

This toolkit is your way of putting down on paper what ‘normal’ looks like for you. You might want to ask a friend or someone else you trust to help you answer these questions. It can be really hard to identify what normal looks like by yourself – because to you it is just normal! Your friends will be able to help you identify the stuff that makes you, you.

This toolkit will help you build a portrait of what you are like when you are well. For that reason, it’s easiest to fill in when you are feeling OK. If you aren’t feeling OK now – don’t wait to fill this in before seeking help – ask for help now.

If you are feeling OK, then filling in the toolkit should be pretty easy. It could take anything from ten minutes to two hours to fill in depending on how much detail you think is important.

Filling in the toolkit

This toolkit will help you build a picture of your habits when you are well. It’s important to be honest with yourself when filling it in. Probably some of your habits are unusual, or a bit unhealthy – don’t worry about this too much – so are everyone else’s. We’ll all have things we like about ourselves, and things we aren’t so proud of.

This isn’t a document to sell yourself as something you aren’t, or to beat yourself up about what you are.

You might decide that you don’t want everyone in your life to know the answers to all the questions in the toolkit. That’s fine – we designed it so you can take out slides you don’t want other people to see.

This way, you can share different things with different people, from your doctor, to your girlfriend’s mum; putting you in control of who knows what about you.

We’ve tried to build a tool that lets you:

- tell people about you as an individual;
- record some habits that you think are important;
- and record your attitude and feelings when you are well.

On the other side of this sheet we have given you an example of how to fill out the toolkit. If you have trouble filling out any questions ask a parent, teacher or friend to help you.
