

Keeping safe whilst streaming

It's important to consider the wellbeing of your community and yourself before taking on a streaming challenge for Ambitious about Autism. Read our guidelines for staying safe online before you take on your challenge.

Establishing house rules for your viewers is a brilliant way to create a kind and respectful environment during your stream. Here are some suggested house rules.

Please feel free to

- say hello and ask me how I am
- give me advice for the game
- ask me for information about Ambitious about Autism
- show respect and kindness to me, other viewers and the moderators.

Please refrain from

- hate speech of any kind
 - spamming
 - asking me any uncomfortable questions
 - revealing game spoilers.
- Think about how you would like to promote your streaming challenge. Perhaps you just want to broadcast to your friends and family. Alternatively, you may want to tell the world about your challenge on socials. Sharing publicly this way will mean anyone could view your live stream.
 - Always check the community guidelines for the platform you're streaming on and stick to these!
 - Consider the background of your livestream. Make sure the background is plain, with no personal information in view to maintain your privacy.
 - We advise that streamers should be over 18 years old.
 - Get familiar with the platform you're streaming from before you start. Ensuring you know how to block or report an incident if needed.
 - Ask a friend to moderate the comments in your live stream so that you can focus on your fundraising whilst ensuring the comment section remains a safe space.
